NAVIGATION TOOLS

Leadership entails determining a position, charting a course, and heading towards a destination. It means navigating around various obstacles - concrete ones like road blocks or soft ones like different views - and sailing through weather conditions as harsh as moral dilemmas. But are the manners of and tools for leading equally important as the end goal? And what are the elements – facts, beliefs, values, practical issues – that influence decisions in navigating towards a certain direction?

The classic and modern tools such as the compass and the mobile phone in the ASEFYLS3 design show that every leadership must come with its own acceptable and effective measures. However, one has to be constantly alert and sensitive towards possible internal and external forces that might meddle, manipulate, and mislead one’s decision making process. Only then is the leader a true navigator, able to develop a sense of direction informed by self-awareness and societal needs, and thereby standing up for her/his chosen course.
